Some of you out there have not just a city or state or region as your territory, but the entire globe. If that sounds like you, you'll want to invest in the book "International Statistics—Flowers and Plants 2018," compiled by AIPH and Union Fleurs. It's the only international compendium of horticultural data that we know of.

What's in it? Data from 40 different production countries, nine different crop categories, and a wealth of information on trade channels, auction turnover and economic development from participating countries. No international horticulturist should be without it!
