U of Florida Greenhouse Training Online Courses on Weed Management

Jennifer Zurko

Join the 488 growers who have successfully graduated from Greenhouse Training Online courses offered by the University of Florida IFAS Extension (UF). Manage all aspects of weed management in nurseries and greenhouses, including weed identification, developing herbicide programs and the latest non-chemical methods of weed control that actually work. This intermediate course is designed for growers with some experience and training. The course is offered in English and Spanish.

The course runs for four weeks, from September 25 to October 20, 2017. It costs $199 per participant and includes a personalized certificate of completion. Each week there are two streaming video lessons, readings and assignments (about three to four hours total commitment per week), which can be accessed at any time of day. Bilingual PhD instructors can be accessed via discussion features. To register or for more information, go to <http://hort.ifas.ufl.edu/training> or contact Greenhouse Training, Environmental Horticulture Dept., University of Florida at greenhousetraining@ifas.ufl.edu.

Interested in other courses? The last UF online courses for 2017, Costing & Profitability, starts October 30.
