

GROWERTALKS

GT in Brief

1/1/2021

NGA Show & Indoor Ag-Con to Get Hitched in Vegas

Chris Beytes

If you're looking for indoor farming resources combined with independent grocery contacts, then head to Vegas next May 16-19, specifically the new Caesars Forum Convention Center, where you'll find two co-located shows: the NGA Show, the leading trade show and conference for independent grocers, and Indoor Ag-Con, the premier agriculture conference and trade show for the indoor and vertical farming industry.

The NGA Show has been around for 38 years and it's "the world's premier educational and supplier resource serving the independent grocer community," said Courtney Muller, chief corporate development and strategy officer with Clarion Events North America.

Indoor Ag-Con is much younger, having launched in 2013. It provides exhibitors and attendees with the latest technology and business strategies for growing crops in indoor systems, using hydroponic, aeroponic and aquaponics techniques.

"This is an exciting opportunity and what's bound to be a successful industry-first event that delivers much more value to our members, customers, partners and the markets we serve," said Greg Ferrara, president and CEO of the National Grocers Association.

The NGA Show and Indoor Ag-Con visitors will have access to all exhibits and discounts will be available for cross-over educational event attendance.

For updated information on all of The NGA Show and Indoor Ag-Con events, and to stay connected and educated, visit the websites at thengashow.com and indoor.ag. GT